When people talk about the pleasures of Hollywood cinema, they normally talk about story. In this presentation, Professor Todd Berliner explains the aesthetic pleasures of style in Hollywood cinema.

Illustrated with a variety of film clips, the presentation examines the ways in which Hollywood filmmakers use cinematography, sound, color, editing, music and other stylistic devices to create aesthetic pleasure for mass audiences. Todd Berliner is the author of Hollywood Aesthetic: Pleasure in American Cinema (Oxford University Press, 2017), and is a Professor of Film Studies at UNC Wilmington, teaching film aesthetics, narration, style and American film history.
