My Philosophy: As a peer mentor, it is my philosophy that each student, when putting in their best work, can achieve anything on this campus. As a peer mentor, I strive to enter each session with an attitude of servitude to help guide students so that they get the most out of their time and investment here at UNCW. At the end of each session, I will hope to have provided a neutral and complete answer to all of the questions students present.

My Mission: My mission as a peer advisor is to share my training and skills with all students who enter the office so that they are able to make educated, well-founded decisions about their own academic endeavors. I am excited to interact with and get to know Cameron students and become a resource to my fellow peers.

Tips for Academic Success:

- 1. Know yourself and your limits: As college students, we each know what we are capable of. Know when to pull yourself back and slow down to better understand a situation. However, also know when you're not challenging yourself enough and seek out opportunities to learn more. Find your own balance.
- 2. Find your own niche: Do what is best for you during your college career and really experience who you are and the type of person you want to become. This will make you a much better student as you will be pursuing your own happiness and priorities as opposed to others' expectations of you.
- 3. If it won't matter in five years, don't dwell on it for more than five minutes: This phrase is quoted often. College is hard. Look forward to the future and do your best in all that you do. Don't let the small day-to-day trials define you or overwhelm you.
