A. Discuss University graduate faculty criteria, paragraph 3, to include/clarify chairs, directors and graduate coordinators

University Criteria

All full-time faculty members holding academic rank of professor, associate professor or assistant professor, who meet the criteria established by the UNCW Graduate Council (hereafter called Graduate Council) shall be eligible for membership in the Graduate Faculty. Appropriate exceptions may be approved from time to time, including persons holding the status of adjunct professor.

Persons employed for the first time at UNCW as tenure track faculty, adjunct, or visiting faculty may be granted membership on the Graduate Faculty at the discretion of the graduate dean for an initial appointment not to exceed three years.

Faculty with full-time administrative appointments that include the administration of graduate programs shall be members of the Graduate Faculty in recognition of those duties and responsibilities. Whenever such administrative appointments are concluded, such persons shall be granted a five-year extension of membership, after which each shall be evaluated using the prevailing criteria in the normal five-year cycle, as described in Section 2.

B. Update coordinator manual

C. Update Teaching Assistantship manual

Mark Imperial will present an update on the Joint PhD program in Integrative Coastal Marine Science with ECU

Departments reporting end of term processing (Fs/Us, 3 C's, etc.) to Graduate School versus Graduate School reporting to departments

Discuss repeat policy and maximum # of hours a student can register/receive for a course

Re-applying/applying to UNCW after dismissal

When can a student re-apply to the graduate program they were dismissed from?

For instance, a student is dismissed from the English department due to a grade of F received in the fall 2015 term. Should the student be out the following two terms after the dismissal term and allowed to re-apply the third term after the dismissal term. If yes, the student would be dismissed for the fall 2015 term, out the following spring 2016 term and summer 2016 term and would be allowed to re-apply for the fall 2016 term.

OR, should the student be out the following semester after the dismissal term? Using the same example above, if this option was chosen the student would be dismissed in the fall 2015 term, out the following spring 2016 term and allowed to reapply for the summer 2016 term.

When can a student apply to another graduate program, not the program they were dismissed from?

The English student received a grade of F for the fall 2015 term and is dismissed from the English program. The student wants to apply to the EVS program. Should the student be allowed to apply to the EVS department when he/she wants to or should there be time constraints? Should this scenario have the same time constraints as the scenario listed above?

Maximum # of hours a student can register for in the summer term

Registration

No minimum number of hours is required for official registration; however, specified maximum course loads must not be exceeded. Students in graduate programs are permitted to register for no more than 15 hours in any one semester. Course loads for students who have service appointments will be determined on an individual basis. A student enrolled in the summer may not register for, and will not receive credit for, more than six hours a term.
